AUTHORITIES NOW PREPARE TO FIX BLAME FOR RIOT

Toll of Dead Is 11; While Guards and Prisoners Are Hurt

NAME RINGLEADERS

A "Lifer," Killer, and Others Known As "Hard" In The Group

FOLSOM STATE PRISON, Cal. Nov. 26 (I.N.S.)—With the toll of dead remaining at 11, nine convicts and two guards, three other convicts near death from wounds, and 24 others, including prisoners, guards and prison officials seriously but not dangerously wounded, prison authorities today prepared to fix responsibility for the bloody Thanksgiving Day prison riot here.

Six convicts, a "lifer" and a killer, three robbers, a burglar and a forger—six men who are designated as "hard" even by the other prison inmates—have been singled out as ringleaders of the attempted prison break. They were facing the gallows today for their part in the rioting.

Tony Brown, gangster, is thought to have been the leading factor in the revolt. It was Brown, according to prison officials, who wielded the revolver and who moved among the other convicts, urging and threatening when some of the more timid wished to capitulate.

Named with Brown as ringleaders are Walter B. Burke, a theater bandit; Roy E. Stokes, burglar; James Gleason, robber; Albert A. Stewart, forger; and James H. Gregg, murderer.

Late last night physicians admitted that they held little hope for his recovery.

The end came peacefully.

Under the will Cardinal Bonzano made last Thursday, his entire estate goes to charity.

Thousands of X'mas Seals Are Sent Through the Mail

HARRISBURG, Nov. 26.—Approximately 900,000 letters containing Christmas Seals are being mailed to residents of Pennsylvania with the opening Friday of the 20th annual Christmas Seal sale, according to an announcement made by Col. Henry W. Shoemaker, Christmas Seal chairman for Pennsylvania.

"It has been found," said Col. Shoemaker, "that the mailing of Christmas Seals to individuals, business concerns and others by the Pennsylvania Tuberculosis Society and its affiliated organizations is the best method for distributing these pretty holiday seals. The valuable time of persons who might comprise teams to sell Seals is saved and many busy persons are spared the annoyance of having a solicitor call, as well as the time involved.

"In this mailing of Seals it is explained that there is no obligation resting upon the recipient. The Seals can be purchased, or they can be returned. We find, however, that most persons are glad to help in this great united campaign against tuberculosis. Usually 100 or 200 Seals are sent in each letter and a stamped, addressed envelope is enclosed for the convenience of the recipient.

"In the mail distribution of Christmas Seals the post office department has an important place. The postman, therefore, becomes a valuable ally in the battle against the White Plague.

"The Christmas Seal this year pictures Santa Claus in his sleigh drawn by four reindeer. It is truly Santa's Seal."

UP-COUNTY SCHOOLS MAY BE CONSOLIDATED

Joining of Perkasie and Sellersville Schools May Be Reality

THE DIRECTORS MEET

SELLERSVILLE, Nov. 26.—The consolidation of two neighboring high schools, Sellersville and Perkasie, for the mutual interest of both towns, will probably be a reality if the desires of those interested reach a concrete form.

At a meeting this week of the joint board, the reading of election results whereby Sellersville and Perkasie citizens showed their preference for uniting education forces was the signal to go ahead.

The first action was to draw up and adopt a contract by which the two are formally bound together on a working basis in a High School consolidation arrangement.

Choosing the site will be the next step in the program of major activities. Though the location had been discussed at various times, no definite decision had been made regarding it. A location on the Wert tract has met with considerable favor. A splendid site is available whereby the new building could be placed directly on the borough line, a fact which would place the matter in an actual fifty-fifty basis and remove all chance for argument in that direction.

President Weaver has arranged for a meeting on the grounds—the Wert tract—for Friday afternoon. This will not only be an opportunity to view the spot but it will be an actual regular meeting of the Joint Board—ready for action if the location is decided upon.

Prof. Cooper presented data relative to the present and proposed course from material prepared by himself and Prof. Outland. This is preparatory to securing the co-operation of the State Department of Public Instruction. In all probability a survey of the borough schools will be made immediately, the board having directed that the Department be advised of the situation with the view of securing early co-operation in the project.

Mark Bittle, newly elected Sellersville director, and Roland Benner and Frank Kramer, recently elected at Perkasie, were invited to listen in and take part in the discussions, since the project was to have its formal beginning at this meeting.

The final game for the Bucks-Montgomery League championship will be played in all probability at Norristown on December 3rd, when Yardley, winners of this section, will tackle Royersford, winners of the Montgomery side.

EXTENSION OF RED CROSS DRIVE WILL MEAN MUCH

Opportunity Is Given for Folk To Enroll Up To November 30th

A SPLENDID CAMPAIGN

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 26.—The request of the volunteer workers now canvassing in Philadelphia and the four adjacent counties for the Red Cross Roll Call, that the eleventh annual membership enrollment be extended, marks November 30th as the closing day.

The roll call for 1928 opened on Armistice Day, and its purpose is to redouble the members obtained during previous enrollments in Philadelphia and the counties of Bucks, Delaware, Montgomery and Chester. An army of eight thousand volunteers is still engaged in the canvass, and there are indications that the response will be one of the largest since the war. The time required however, for a thorough canvass of the fifty-five Red Cross branches in the four counties, in the city wards in Philadelphia, and in 5,300 industrial plants, makes the reports of returns extremely slow. It was necessary to extend the period of the roll call if the workers are to be enabled to carry out their plans which this year, cover a greater number of people than ever were reached before.

A final report luncheon of roll call returns will be given for Red Cross workers from the branches, wards, industries and the special business men's division in the Bellevue-Stratford on Wednesday, November 30th. All those who have not already joined or rejoined the Red Cross for 1928 are asked by the Chapter roll call committee to do so today in response to President Coolidge's call for five million members—the minimum needed to support the organization. "The Red Cross is the only organization that every nation in the world believes in and it belongs to you," the statement reads. "On Thanksgiving Day millions of sufferers from disaster gave thanks for relief received from a generous nation through the American Red Cross in the Mississippi flood, the Florida tornado, and in over seventy other disasters in which the Red Cross gave aid from its general funds.

"Today about fifty thousand persons are being cared for from the Red Cross general fund of whom all but 17,000 are suffering from five disasters in the past month including the New England flood and the Pittsburgh explosion. This national service is possible only through memberships.

"Who shall say with certainty that the section in which they live is immune from disaster of flood, fire, explosion or epidemic? When it comes, the people turn instinctively to the Red Cross to give through or receive from. This preparedness and the other major activities for the ex-service man and for the benefit of public health depend upon sufficient membership."

One of the most interesting incidents of the roll call occurred on Thursday, November 17th, during President Coolidge's visit to Philadelphia. On his arrival at Broad Street Station two uniform workers stood holding the Red Cross flag—symbol of the organization of which, by virtue of his office, he is national president. Mr. Coolidge left his escort, greeted the Red Cross workers, shook hands, and smiled and chatted with them for a moment or two.

Among the first reports made in Philadelphia was enrollment of more than 800 students at the University of Pennsylvania. Men and women at the Quartermaster's Depot, he majority of them ex-service men or the mothers and sisters of ex-service men, signed up five hundred strong. The first reports from the Veterans' Bureau showed 136 members; out at Wayne ninety Italians and colored laborers were enrolled by a single worker.

Christmas Mail To Cost U. S. $9,000,000

By International News Service

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—The United States government will play the role of Santa Claus to the tune of about $9,000,000 this Christmas season, in that it will cost the Government approximately that amount above and beyond ordinary expenses of running the mail service to handle the 1927 Christmas mail.

This figure is based upon compilations of similar additional expenditures for previous year, with due allowance for the usual normal increase.

Last year the Post Office Department disbursed $8,688,215 for additional service to take care of the great volume of Christmas mail that poured into the vast postal machine from every possible source. Most of this amount was expended for salaries of additional employes.

Figures for the additional income resulting from the Christmas mail rush were not announced.

—Mrs. Theodore Deitzel, of New Brunswick, N. J., were Thanksgiving Day guests at the home of Mrs. James Cullen, of 912 Cedar street.

WHO IS AVERAGE?

A magazine recently made a great fuss over a real flesh and blood specimen of "the average man," claiming it had found him in Fort Madison, Iowa. It described him, printed his picture, and altogether made a great noise about its discovery. But by that very act it completely annihilated its own case, for the average man never gets his name, much less his picture, in the magazines.

Then a Chicago newspaper stepped in to complete the work of destroying the illusion. It brought him to Chicago for the purpose of observing him microscopically. In Chicago he betrayed himself immediately. It was Sunday when he arrived, and he went to church. Anyone from Fort Madison who goes to church on his first day in Chicago is not an average man. In fact, the average man never goes to church, if churchgoers are to be believed. Ask any church member and you will quickly find he considers himself above the average.

Society must set its face sternly against this effort to establish the average man as an actuality. The average man has always been a mere figure of speech. He is often heard about and never seen. He is the other fellow—if he is a fellow at all. You cannot put your thumb down and say positively "I have him!" for when you lift your thumb to look at him he is not there.

This thing of striking the average must cease. If it is persisted in, some one will be endeavoring to identify the United States as an average nation. Such a thing would be intolerable for it would be in direct contradiction of the claims of school histories, Independence Day orators and 100 per cent. Americans.

The average man will no more admit his identity than he will admit that his automobile is an average car.

THE STOCK MARKET CIRCLE

The loss of more than $80,000,000 in stock values in a single day is of small consequence, in so far as the basic prosperity of the country is concerned. The recent drop of those proportions did not establish a precedent.

There is an old saying, "Whatever goes up must come down" that is applicable to the stock market.

There was no real reason, beyond the purpose of speculators and the hopes of optimistic buyers, for the tremendous advances in prices of industrials and rails since last spring. And there was no reason for the sudden drop, beyond the purpose of speculators and the fears of pessimistic sellers. The fact is that there is a certain time of the year when markets rise and another time when they decline.

Since the bear movement a few Wall Street speculators are a little richer and a lot of outside speculators are a little poorer. Some more lambs have been sheared. That is about all the present market process means. As a matter of fact, it is just as well that it happened now before the fabric of speculative finance had been further strained.

Next spring, or before, this same group of stocks or others will figure in a bull market. Wall Street will sell and the lambs will buy. And then when the bears send the stocks tumbling again Wall Street will buy back its shares for less than it sold them.

About the surest way to spend one's declining years in obscurity is to win a beauty prize in early youth.

John Barrymore in "WHEN A MAN LOVES" is a Warner Bros. Picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Fabien, good and handsome youth of France, trains for the priesthood; but meets and loves Manon Lescaut, beauteous orphan, whose rascally brother, realizing her worldly value, barters her for gold to Ravoir, rich connoisseur of women. Fabien saves her and carries her off to Paris, where they wander into a boarding house and, in a great and sacred love, live happily together, though poor. While Fabien is out, his chum Tiberge arrives and, learning they are not married, plans to "save" Fabien. Meanwhile, Manon's brother eavesdrops.

"Monsieur, why must you interfere," inquired Manon, "Fabien told me just this morning that he had never been so happy in his life before."

"Momentary forgetfulness, such as Fabien is experiencing, is not good for a man's soul. My child," the cruelty of Tiberge's words was softened somewhat by his spiritual expression, "I will be brutally frank with you. For Fabien's sake you must leave him."

"I will never do that! He would not want me to," protested Manon stormily.

"The truth is harsh," continued Tiberge with convincing simplicity, "Yet this you must know—you have robbed Fabien of his parents, his career and his God. In exchange for these—what pitiful thing have you given him?"

"I have given him my heart—my whole heart," her lips trembled piteously and she cried in spite of herself as she continued, "All, all of it."

"We want to be well out of here before Fabien returns."

"Yes, that is true, but what of the day when he awakens from this dream of the flesh and weighs your love against all that it has cost him?" continued Tiberge, mercilessly.

With a piteous cry Manon buried her head in her arms and sobbed.

Quick to take advantage of a point gained, Tiberge went over to Manon and placed a kindly hand on her shoulder. He had promised the elder Des Grieux to locate Fabien and bring him home. But at that time he had not pictured Manon as such an appealing child and his duty became harder to perform when he saw her, crushed and heartbroken at his prediction of Fabien's future.

"If you love him, as you say you do, you will leave and never see him again." More shaken than he cared to admit, Tiberge turned toward the door and silently departed.

Manon's heart was too filled with tears and her mind too confused by this sudden turn of events for her to reply. Shaken with sobs she rocked piteously back and forth, not knowing what to do. What should she do? Did Fabien's friend tell the truth about her ruining his life? It was all such a cruel nightmare in the midst of their happiness that it seemed unreal. Manon wiped the tears from her streaming eyes and, as she saw Lescaut swagger out from his hiding place with a hateful air of "I told you so!" she could not restrain a shudder.

Under pressure of this new worry, Manon had forgotten all about her brother being there. She implored piteously, "Andre, won't you please go and leave me alone?"

"No, you heard what he said—do you want to ruin Fabien's life as well as play the deuce with your own prospects?" Lescaut said this simply for effect. What he really meant was that if she continued playing the fool he would be left with an empty purse, whereas if he turned her over to the Comte his pockets would be filled to overflowing. "Come on, get your bonnet," he continued impatiently, "We want to be well out of here before Fabien returns."

"I must see him." Manon was praying that Fabien would come back and not let her go.

"It will mean prison for him if the police chance to find you here."

It was this terrible thought that decided Manon. Fabien should not suffer through her! She would go away and return after the danger had passed. Fabien would understand that it was just a temporary arrangement.

"I will go with you," announced Manon resolutely, "But I must leave a note for Fabien." Brushing away her tears she sat down at the little desk.

Marie startled them both at this point by bursting into the room. She explained that after much arguing she had persuaded the jeweler to retrade the locket for Fabien's buckles. Marie was awed by Lescaut's silken presence, and after giving Manon the package she stood around, waiting to find out what was happening.

"Darling": Manon wrote, "Andre says that the police will arrest you unless I leave here for a little while. It will mean an absence of only a day or so—sweetheart—you are not to imagine that I am going away forever.

Goodbye,
Manon.

P. S. Here are your buckles—a little farewell present."

While Manon penned the note Lescaut emptied the wall pegs of her simple little dresses and hastily stuffed them into her box. He was fearful that Fabien would return before they got away. Yet in spite of the risk he must take time to read Manon's parting message. An opportunity offered itself as Manon bade Marie a tearful good bye.

"Look after Fifi!" she said, "And tell Fabien I will be back soon..."

During the second that Manon's back was turned, Lescaut had read the note and maliciously torn off the first portion. What he left was complete and final—but not in the least the meaning Manon meant to convey to her lover.

Lescaut's experience as a gambler had trained him to look ahead to the next move, which is what he did now by surreptitiously slipping Marie a few gold pieces as Manon tearfully started for the door. His farewell to the serving girl was also characteristic, she might be as useful as an ace up his sleeve, he would keep her interest alive.

Just as the door closed Marie received her first kiss from a silk coated grandee. The fact that it was wafted to her from his finger tips made it no less wonderful.

Life for Marie was becoming heavenly and it was all due to her Angel, Manon, who had gone away crying. Marie could not understand why parting from Fabien would bring forth a single tear. She hated him and decided to "fix things up" so that when he came back she could "watch him squirm" at the nice story she was going to make up about Manon.

CHAPTER VIII

During the week of Fabien's earth born happiness with Manon he had curtailed personal expenses to the extent of depriving himself of necessities so that he could buy a chain for her locket. He planned that it should be a first week anniversary present and felt as rich as a King when the frail silver necklace was safely stored away in his pocket.

Eager to delight his adored one with the surprise, Fabien hurried home. Had he not been so absorbed in his own dreams he would have seen Lescaut helping the tearful Manon into a coach before the pension door!

Was it Fate, or what, that made them pass each other so closely without knowing how near they were or anything of the other's need?

Fabien gaily climbed the stairs, three at a time, to their love nest and, filled with eager happiness, pulled the door wide and shouted, "Manon, dear!" No answer. "Come out from your hiding place—I have something for you!" Still no answer.

Unwilling to wait, Fabien began looking about the room. The playful search came to a rigid halt when he saw the empty wall pegs. "Manon's clothes gone! Dear God, what has happened?" An awful fear gripped Fabien's heart. Like a blind man he groped about the room, still hoping against hope that he would find her. Presently his hand brushed something to the floor. His buckles! He looked at them in amazement and his heart almost stopped beating when he saw Manon's note. Without touching it he read from the torn paper:

Good bye.

MANON.

P. S.—Here are your buckles—a little farewell present.

Fabien stared at the heartbreaking message so long that his eyes grew blurred and he could no longer see. Finally something within him seemed to snap. Galvanized into action, he opened the door, calling wildly for Marie.

WESTWOOD AND ST. ANN'S FIGHT TO A SCORELESS TIE

St. Ann's closed its 1927 football season, by playing a scoreless tie with the strong Westwood A. C. of Philadelphia, on Thursday.

The local eleven completely outplayed the visitors, reaching the ten yard line five times, but each time the opposing line held the "Saints" for downs.

Both teams had the same colored jerseys, purple and gold. This proved a great handicap to the Bristol eleven's forward pass attack.

Judging from this game the "Saints" are looking forward to a very successful season next year.

The football season came to a corrupt end because ten members of the squad are injured and it is rather impossible to continue with a much crippled team.

Line-up:

St. Ann's		Westwood
Stallone	left end	Mossetti
Dan Greco	left tackle	McSorley
D. Greco	left guard	Berry
A. Missera	center	Zeke
Veland	right guard	Sullivan
Billie	right tackle	Fenlon
Pope	right end	McFee
Sabatini	quarterback	Reesie
C. Greco	left halfback	Rockhill
Gilardi	right halfback	Bouers
J. Missera	fullback	Gallagher

Resident of Croydon Is Married in Olney Church

On Wednesday evening at seven o'clock in the Olney Presbyterian Church, Miss Leona Bergois, of Olney, became the bride of Andrew Stetler Crossley, of Croydon.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, William Whitaker, while her attendant was her cousin, Miss Lillian Jost, of Croydon.

Harry Whitaker, brother of the bride, was ring-bearer, and Mr. Crossley was attended by his brother, Frank Crossley. The ushers were William Whitaker and Albert Bergois.

Shortly before the arrival of the bridal party a relative of the bride sang "O Promise Me." The bride was attractive in a gown of white satin, and she wore a veil and carried a bouquet of white roses.

Miss Jost was attired in orchid silk and she wore a picture hat to match. The bridesmaid's bouquet was of chrysanthemums.

About 150 guests from Philadelphia, Croydon, Barrington, N. J., Narberth and New York were entertained at the reception held at the bride's home, following the ceremony.

Upon the return of Mr. and Mrs. Crossley from a trip to Washington they will reside in their completely furnished home at 258 Cora street, Olney.

The happy couple received many lovely gifts, among them a chest of silver, a gift from the bride's uncle.

Deposits were $16,800,000,000, a gain of $840,000,000.

The following six states each having resources of over one billion dollars, account for nearly 75% of the country's total:

Pennsylvania	2,540,167,054.83
Illinois	2,051,621,952.83

In reviewing the figures, President John W. Platten, of the United States Mortgage & Trust Company says:

"It is a cause of satisfaction that the resources of the trust companies of the country continue to seek new high levels year after year, the totals at the present time being considerably more than double those of ten years ago. Yet it is none the less gratifying to note the unprecedented efforts being made by the trust companies to extend their service into new channels.

"The situation is most encouraging and warrants every confidence in the future of trust companies and their ability to render a most valuable and constantly broadening service to the public."

State News

HARRISBURG, Nov. 26 (I.N.S.)—Pennsylvania's methods of dealing with a surplus of doe deer were given a national angle today when Seth E. Gordon, conservation director of the Izaak Walton League, entered the discussion with a statement outlining his viewpoints.

Gordon reveiewed the State Game Commission's methods in dealing with does during the time he was secretary of the commission, and since that time. He admitted the necessity of killing does when they become too numerous, and referred to the special hunter method now in effect as "well worth watching."

Expressing the hope that hunters will not get careless in shooting deer because of the present surplus of does, Gordon urged greater caution on the part of sportsmen.

Gordon's views were received with interest here because the present surplus of deer in the State is said to be partly due to the policies he outlined while executive officer of the commission.

Much of the stocking was done at that time and a constant educational campaign carried on to impress hunters with the necessity of sparing does and young bucks.

In addition to protecting does and young bucks one of the main purposes of his minimum antler requirements rule was to prevent hunters shooting at moving objects which they thought to be deer.

This practice, the commission has always held, is responsible for many of the fatalities of the big game season.

After his connection with the commission, Gordon joined the Chicago office of the Izaak Walton League. Since that time he has served as conservative director of the League and heads that part of its activities throughout the country.

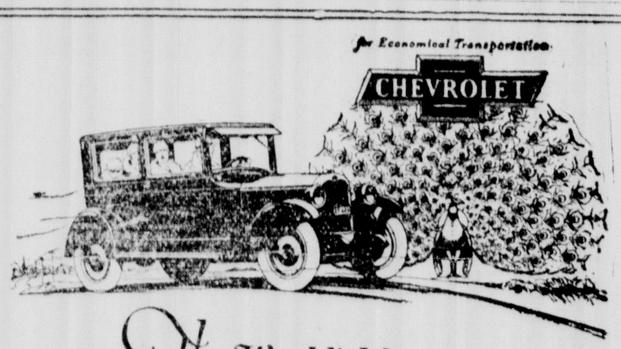

If your boy has yet to start in music, make that start possible this Christmas. Let him have an instrument that will make learning a constant delight; an instrument that will insure his continued interest and rapid progress. A King instrument is the finest present you can give him, and your reward will be a most lasting one. The joy that your boy will get from that Gift of Music will only be excelled by the happiness you get from his activities in that band or orchestra.
